

Last weekend was Big Garden Birdwatch 2015. The RSPB asks members of the public to collect information about the birds that visit their garden in any one hour. The scientists will add all the sightings together with those from thousands of other gardens right across the country and find out how birds and other wildlife are doing. Once this has all been checked and pieced together, they will be able to monitor trends and understand how different birds are faring.

Draw pictures or make an information sheet about birds that visit your garden or the school playground.
